Building the Bridge between Business and IT

Laboratory Information Management Systems (LIMS)

Could a LIMS simplify your life in the lab?

- Isn't managing samples, results, reports one of the biggest time consumers in your everyday work?
- Do you feel more like a secretary instead of a scientist?
- Are you spending more time at the desk instead of in the lab?
- Are you facing an increasing amount of internal and external regulations resulting in more and more paperwork?
- Do you want to enhance the quality of your data (Quality by Design)?

If your answer to one or more questions is yes, then you should consider using an up-to-date LIMS to optimize your laboratory processes.

What needs to be done?

- An external review of your lab processes and system landscape enables an independent view on your current situation
- Identify your goals, stakeholder(s), and business cases

- Define and design your future processes
- Evaluate technical constraints
- Select the most suitable LIMS
- Manage the change in your processes

What will you gain from it?

- No more transcriptions and double-checks
- Focus on your lab work instead of doing paperwork because the new process will be self-documented, incl. all cross checks and sub processes.
- With a defined plan for continuous lifecycles, you can quickly integrate new instruments, processes as well as resulting work-flows.
